Edward Jenner wanted to find a way to help children not to get a deadly disease. The name of the disease was smallpox. Children became very sick when they got smallpox. Some died, and some had ugly scars after they got well.

Edward was a doctor. He knew one important thing about smallpox. After someone got it once, he or she could not get it again.

In those days, farmers were talking about a sickness and cows usually got this sickness. Sometimes milkmaids also got this sickness. They called it cowpox. Cowpox did not kill people. It did not leave scars. People would never get smallpox after they got cowpox.

Was it true? Edward heard the stories and wanted to know the answer, so he used pus from a cowpox sore to make a vaccine. He gave the vaccine to a boy. Then the boy didn't get smallpox.

Dr. Edward Jenner made the first vaccine. Today we have many vaccines, like BNT or AZ, to help people.
