Every written text has a purpose. This means that a writer might have one of many different reasons when writing a text. These could be:

To entertain – to have people not to get bored by texts such as stories or play scripts;

To inform – to tell others some information by texts such as news or fact-files;

To persuade – to make people agree by texts such as speeches, or posters;

To express their feelings – to talk about the feelings by texts such as diary, or poetry.

These four purposes of writing - to entertain, inform, persuade, and express feelings – are often referred to the four core purposes. Most texts can fit into one of them. Sometimes we can tell the writer's purpose by the title, too.

Please go back to the B section/Cloze test. Read the readings I and II again, and answer the questions below.
