Hi, Kobe,
 Sorry. I can't play tennis with you this Saturday. I hurt my knees and twisted my ankle when I fell down from my bike yesterday. My girlfriend called me when I was riding a bike. We were talking on the cellphone, and then I bumped into a sign. Mom got angry with me and she didn't allow me to go out for two weeks. ☹☹☹ Lying in bed and staying at home are so boring. I really learned a lesson from this accident. I won't do other things when I'm riding a bike in the future.

Today, more and more people have smart phones or tablet PCs. With 3G or Wifi, they can get on the Internet everywhere. It is convenient for them to chat with their friends or share news on some social network websites, like Facebook, Twitter, and Instagram. They can interact with others through their 3C products at any time.

Some Internet users are addicted to sharing their feelings and things happen to or in front of them. They share the news first when something happens. Look at the picture, when people see a person fall into water, instead of saving the person, they use their smart phones to take pictures and share this accident on the Net. This picture may be a little bit exaggerated, but it is true for some people. We have to remind ourselves not to become one of them. Sharing things on the Net is not everything.
