Through the Internet, it is convenient to make friends from different countries. We may have opportunities to visit our friends around the world and buy gifts for them. But every culture has its special gift taboos. Here are two examples. We don't give a clock as a present in Taiwan because it sounds like "the end of life" in Chinese. In Japan, people avoid giving combs to others. "Comb" has the same sound as the word for "death" in Japanese.

In addition, colors and numbers are also important. Yellow roses mean "jealousy" in Italy. White signifies purity in some countries, but it may suggest "death" in Taiwan. As to numbers, sometimes we have to give gifts in odd numbers while sometimes we should give gifts in even numbers. For instance, an even number of flowers is a symbol of bad luck in Germany. These gift taboos are complicated, aren't they? It is difficult to remember all of them. Therefore, we need to do some research and respect different cultures before we buy our gifts.
