To many Asians, Lunar New Year is one of the most important festivals of the year. It is also known as Chinese New Year. In Taiwan, people usually get at least one-week vacation to celebrate Lunar New Year. Just like the spirit of Christmas or Thanksgiving, family members will get together to enjoy the meal and family times.

There are many special traditional events during Lunar New Year, like Lion Dance, Dragon Dance, and setting off the firecrackers. Each family will paste up some Chinese couplets around the doors for good luck. Many people also like to go to the temples and pray for their family. On Lunar New Year's Eve, they will have a big dinner together and then grownups will give children some "lucky money" in red envelopes because red represents good luck in Chinese culture. On that night, children will "shou suey" for their parents. It's said that by this way their parents will live longer and become healthier. There is also one funny tradition in many families, which is family will gamble together on New Year's Eve. The winner will be seen as the luckiest person in the coming year.
